MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

N a little commentary on the characteristics of the French people I was much interested by this paragraph: "The advent of a baby into a French family means the opening of a bank account. If its mother and father are humble people such as those who do concierge work in apartment buildings, then they give to this baby whatever they gain from blacking the shoes and whatever tips they get from opening the doors late at night. No sacrifice is too great to make for a child." Isn't that a suggestion for American parents?

I do not mean so much the opening of a bank account at the child's birth. I suppose all parents know that is what ought to be done whether they do it or not. What I mean is the method of saving-the putting aside of the proceeds from some definite source for the child's benefit.

Of course, as a rule, it wouldn't be from blacking shoes. In one family that I know of, a little calf born the same day as the baby girl was straightway christened Louisa May's cow and was always treated as such, not only in name but in fact. A strict account was kept of the milk sold from that cow, and all the money so brought in, and the money made later by the sale of her calves, was put into the bank in Louisa May's name.

Concequently, when Louisa May grew up and found she had a talent for the violin, with that nucleus in the bank, the course at the country's best music school was not the impossibility that it might otherwise have

In a farmer's family the proceeds from a certain ten-acre potato field, set aside from his birth, sent the son of the family to Harvard. Of course, the man who has a regular salary does not have like opportunities for saving. But what's to prevent any man, from the day the little foreigner makes his appearance in the home, from putting aside all the pennies that pass through his hands?

Of course, the child's education is going to cost just so much money, no matter whether it be saved from some particular source or simply put aside in a lump sum each year. I'm not trying to show that it wouldn't. All that I want to show is, that there's a much more interesting way. Also, one that you will feel much less. For if you come to regard any part of your income as not belonging to you to spend, you will straightway find that you do not count upon it, and hence do not find it so hard to put it away.

In my giving and saving I have found that out. Recently I have gotten into the habit of thinking of my earnings, not as the whole amount, but as the whole amount less the sum I have promised myself to put aside for charity and to save, and I find that makes both the giving and saving easier.
